Inspired to learn

Marian University's English program inspires students for a wide variety of opportunities following graduation. Close working relationships with faculty and staff enable students to achieve their personal and professional goals.

Marian English students have the opportunity to:

- Read literature from a diversity of cultures, contexts, and perspectives, while exploring its development within aesthetic, social, cultural, and intellectual contexts.
- Investigate literature's role as an expression of or challenge to societal values.
- Read and think critically and reflectively while evaluating theories and practices of literary criticism.
- Enhance skills in writing thoughtful and sophisticated expository, argumentative, and analytical prose.
- Write individual creative works, such as poetry, fiction, and drama.
- Share original works with a community of writers through campus readings and interactions with visiting writers.
- Become a member of Sigma Tau Delta, the English international honor society.
- Become involved in study-abroad experiences

Inspired to lead

The internship, capstone project, or student teaching experience allows English students to apply classroom knowledge to practical work experiences. Students add experience to their résumés and establish relationships with numerous companies and school districts.

An English degree from Marian prepares students for a variety of career possibilities. English students have engaged in applied learning experiences in such diverse fields as:

- Advertising
- Business
- Education
- Law
- Ministry
- Public relations
- Publishing and writing
- Social justice work
